The Hang Seng University of Hong Kong and ArtNext present Wang Yi's solo exhibition: "The Stars Are Not Afraid to Appear Like Fireflies"

The Hang Seng University of Hong Kong (HSUHK), in partnership with ArtNext, presents the solo exhibition of acclaimed Chinese contemporary artist Wang Yi (王一), "The Stars Are Not Afraid to Appear Like Fireflies". Co-curated by Mianco Wong and Xie Xiaomin, it features recent works from Wang's iconic Reflection of Shadow series alongside the new Ksana series.

The exhibition's title draws from Rabindranath Tagore's Stray Birds, using "shadow" as a lens to examine how self-awareness forms through light reflections, personal experiences, and societal structures, while true existence often remains elusive. Layered, ephemeral imagery in reflective installations and paintings invites viewers to engage with the dynamics of "seeing and being seen", prompting reflecting on the visible and invisible, the individual and the environment.

The immersive space is designed as an abstract maze of reflective black glass and red bulbs, echoing the venue's floor-to-ceiling windows and Hong Kong's layered urban architecture. As visitors navigate through the installation, their reflections illuminate, refract, and overlap, heightening awareness of their existence amid forces of resistance and dissolution.

Reflection of Shadow is the artist's core exploration of "appearing and the concealing". Meticulous outlining turns light into an active generator of shadows. Dense layers and subtle shifts suspend images between certainty and dissolution—always forming, yet fading, like a shadow's reflection—evoking an unconfirmable existence.

The new Ksana series extends this exploration into the temporality of appearance, capturing Hong Kong's intense and fleeting light bursts. Using industrial aluminum panels, Wang Yi applies hundreds of translucent pigment layers with a glazing technique inspired by Southern Song Dynasty ceramics. Repeated application and erasure let forms drift, balancing emergence and disappearance—light as a momentary event, appearing, then vanishing.

Born in Shanghai in 1991, Wang Yi earned his master's degree in Oil Painting from the China Academy of Art in 2016. A leading voice among China's new abstract generation, he has been shortlisted for the Tomorrow Sculpture Award and the John Moores Painting Prize (China), and received the Porsche Young Chinese Artist of the Year Award in 2021. These international recognitions underscore his fluid transition across two- and three-dimensional media.

Wang Yi's multidisciplinary practice spans painting, sculpture, installation, and text. Central to his approach is his self-developed theory of "Grand Geometry", which frames light-shadow dynamics and social issues through rational structures. He views geometric forms as revealing the world's underlying logic and insists that abstract art should function not merely as decoration or formal experimentation, but as a vessel for profound ideas. By distilling the complexities of the urban environment and social orders into precise geometric language, his works construct grand, dialectical narratives within a rational framework.

This exhibition is a key component of HSUHK's Master of Arts in Art Business and related programmes. The partnership between HSUHK and ArtNext exemplifies how contemporary art can seamlessly bridge academia, artistic practice, and the art market, thereby enriching educational dialogue.
